PCO GENERAL MEETING Wednesday, April 19, 7:30 pm

From the PCO President John Lydon

Last month's Flyer included a transcription of the first part of Mario Avignone's "The Story of Why the Pullman Civic Organization was Organized" printed in 1984. As we continue to search Pullman archives for the second half of this story, I want to share aspects of an article I recently came across titled "Rethinking Pullman: Urban Space and Working-Class Activism" by Dr. Janice L. Reiff. Dr. Reiff was an Illinois native who worked at the Newberry Library and taught at Northwestern University as well as UCLA. She was an expert on Chicago history and often wrote about Pullman.

To start, let's engage in a brief thought experiment. First, what comes to mind when you think of Pullman's planned space? Next, what perceptions do you have about different spaces in our community? Finally, how might your neighbor experience these different spaces?

The three questions above relate to the central framework Dr. Reiff uses in "Rethinking Pullman" that examines conceived, perceived, and lived spaces. The primary goal of the article is to explore the intersectionality of these paradigms in defining community space and how people move within them over time.

Dr. Reiff argues the story of Pullman should further include the spaces that surround the company town, citing neighborhoods such as Roseland and Kensington were home to almost half of the Pullman workforce by 1894. These neighborhoods played a central role in the life of Pullman workers, providing not only options for housing and shopping, but also pivotal meeting places and partnerships critical to the historic strike.

Furthermore, "Rethinking Pullman" identifies forces created to ensure spaces maintained racial boundaries throughout the past century. In the article, Dr. Reiff names different associations such as the Greater Pullman Property Restriction Association and Roseland Area Protective Association that actively enforced restrictive covenants. There are also depictions of massive riots in response to the City of Chicago proposing integrated housing in our community. The history of redlining and racism continues to have an exponential impact on the world around us.

Today our community—now a National Historical Park—is celebrated for its significant influence on the labor movement and legacy of African American/Black leadership as well as industrial innovation and urban planning. Pullman's numerous, essential American stories need to be championed. Still, how can we recognize histories often untold?

Go back to the initial thought experiment. Can we use this framework to consider our collective histories and move together toward justice?

The Pullman Civic Organization is committed to the following goals:

Goal One: Increase our diverse membership Goal Two: Clearly define our purpose and role Goal Three: Extend our lines of communication Goal Four: Make our community more inclusive Goal Five: Address issues that impact our quality-of-life

Join us in this work! Every May the PCO hosts our annual membership drive. Come see what our organization is about and consider how your talents can be used to better our community.

Interested in learning more? The full article "Rethinking Pullman: Urban Space and Working-Class Activism" published in Social Science History (Spring 2000) can be accessed at the digital library JSTOR (jstor.org) where you can register for a free account.

Together, we can.

Historic Pullman Foundation Events Emily Maynard

April 2023 HPF Speaker Series - April 23

In the 1960s, when the Pullman neighborhood was threatened with demolition, the residents united to save their homes and community. Long-time Pullman resident and Historic Pullman Foundation (HPF) Board Member Cindy McMahon's presentation will touch on the origins of HPF and discuss how the organization managed major challenges, preserved significant buildings in the Town, and celebrated major accomplishments.

The Pullman Lens: The Center of the Universe - April 30

From its very beginning, Hotel Florence played a pivotal role in the cultural life of the Pullman community. HPF and Pullman historian and resident Andy Bullen will look some of the rich history and role of Hotel Florence in the lives of Pullman residents. The Pullman Lens event series takes place only every 5th Sunday of the month (quarterly) -- something you don't want to miss!

Pullman Railroad Days volunteering

Support Historic Pullman Foundation by volunteering at this year's Pullman Railroad Days (and beyond!). Volunteers at our semi annual event May 20-21 will assist with welcoming guests and checking them in, ticketed entry line management, parking, tours and programming, membership signups, and/ or gift shop customer service. Community volunteers make nonprofit events possible. Don't wait -- consider supporting Pullman by signing up today: www. bit.ly/RRDvolunteers.

Solon Says: A Report of the PCO Beman Committee

Megan Lydon and Wyatt Ollestad Co-Chairs pcobemancommittee@gmail.com

Join us on Saturday, April 22, starting at 1:00PM at the Florence Lowden Miller Historic Pullman Center (614 E. 113th St.) for a special presentation hosted by the PCO Beman Committee on Stability, Longevity, and Sustainability of Historic Districts by Keith Goad of Berkshire Hathaway HomeServices. Keith is an expert on the real estate value of historic properties and will be on hand to discuss the unique importance of historic homes, the sustainability of historic districts, and the ways homeowners can contribute to the stability of their neighborhoods.

And then on Thursday, May 4th at 7:00PM, also at the Florence Lowden Miller Historic Pullman Center (614 E. 113th St.), we will be hosting first year graduate students from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago's Historic Preservation program as they each present a charette of Market Square as part of their Preservation Design Studio class led by professor Charlie Pipal. Join us in supporting an emerging group of preservation professionals and hear some creative planning and design ideas for our own community.

These events mark the first in a forthcoming series the PCO Beman Committee will be hosting throughout the coming months, each custom tailored to historic preservation and restoration Pullman homeowners can employ on their own houses. Watch this space for further updates!

A glimpse at Stability, Longevity, and Sustainability of Historic Districts by Keith Goad:

Historic preservation does much more than preserve bricks and mortar. It plays a fundamental role in attracting and informing architectural, demographic, socioeconomic, and cultural diversity. It recognizes that our built history connects us with our past and provides context for the places we occupy in the world. It merges design with craftsmanship, demand for modern utility with embodied energy, and progressive ideas for economic revitalization with traditional authenticity. Historic preservation is at the same time egalitarian; all socioeconomic classes in every corner of the nation have successfully utilized its principles to protect their heritage and revitalize communities and establish pride of place.

Keeping neighborhoods historically consistent has been shown to provide stability, raise property values, and generate momentum to continue growth and expansion, benefiting homeowners, neighborhoods and surrounding areas. As a steward of a house in a historic district, you know that house and neighborhood will be taken care of for years to come.

Keith has been recognized as one of Chicago's Most Influential Residential Real Estate Brokers by Crain's Custom Media. He received his Master's Degree in Historic Preservation from the School of the Art Institute in 2015 and has become an expert in historic homes; not just on the real estate front, but also as a preservation advocate. His knowledge of historic homes, understanding of the academic world of preservation, attention to detail, creative marketing strategies, and 22 years of top producing real estate experience truly set him apart.

Green Spaces and Places: Cornus Mas, Harbinger of Spring

Lynn Smith

Most of us are anxious to see the arrival of Spring. Although forsythia's lovely flowering branches are widely seen as an indicator of Spring, the flowers of the Cornelian Cherry (or Cornus Mas) actually predate Forsythia. Cornus Mas, a shrub or small tree which is native to central and southern Europe is an attractive addition to your urban garden. It grows in full sun to partial shade, can grow to 15-25 feet tall and 15-20 feet wide (but it can be pruned) and shows very bright small yellow blossoms which are cheery just when most of us are needing them, in late March. The bush/ small tree has an attractive branching pattern common to other dogwoods, edible red fruits (which are mature in the summer) – which taste like a cross between cranberries and sour cherries. While edible these berries benefit from a generous dose of sugar and most often are made into preserves or syrup. The birds love them. If making them into preserves be aware that the pit is quite large, making the preserve making process labor intensive.

This tree is very resistant to dogwood borer and has few (current) pests or diseases. If you choose to grow this tree be aware that the time to trim it is immediately after the tree blooms, so as not to interfere with the next year blooming period.

While the colors of the fall leaves of this tree are not remarkable, the blooms, fruit and interesting bark of this tree make it interesting enough to consider for your Pullman garden.... And we'll keep talking....

New Coffee Shop in Pullman

Nino Quiroz

A new coffee house called Pullman Club Coffee Shop is offering coffee, tea, lattes, espressos and more in Pullman.

"We're so excited to be opening this new coffee shop and know that this will be a welcome addition for tourists and neighborhood residents alike," said Pat Shymanksi, owner.

Shymanski said that the new coffee shop will offer coffee and espresso drinks, cold-brew, tea, as well as seasonal baked-goods and doughnuts freshly made from local providers, such as Old-Fashioned Donuts in Roseland.

The new coffee shop will be housed in a renovated 1881 Gilded Age Mansion that was once the home of H.H. Sessions, the former General Manager of the Pullman Palace Car Company from 1886-1892.

The interior of the coffee shop features 11-foot-high ceilings, cherrywood millwork throughout and a wide outdoor veranda overlooking the Pullman National Historical Park Visitor Center inside the historic Clocktower.

Pat and Mike Shymanski, long-time residents of Historic Pullman, are opening the coffee shop to serve as a "Welcome Center" for the Pullman House Project – a guided tour program of selected Pullman housing units as the backdrop to tell the stories of Pullman's workers and their families in the places they called home.

The Pullman Club Coffee Shop is located at 605 East 111th Street across the street from the Pullman National Historical Park Visitor Center. The Coffee Shop will be open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. on weekdays and 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. on weekends. For more information follow the Pullman Club Coffee Shop or the Pullman House Project on Facebook.

From the Dining Car

Astrid Fingerhut

It's April and I'm feeling nostalgic for the olden days when celebrating Easter meant going to my parents' place for the weekend and having a Passover seder the night before Easter Sunday to combine our family traditions. My father was an acolyte of the school of "we didn't eat till midnight when I was a boy, so quit complaining about the multi-hour seder." And even though we escaped many of the truly onerous traditions (my father favored a nice Petite Sirah or a lovely Shiraz over cloyingly sweet Manischewitz and skipped a lot of the "what the rabbis said" parts of the Haggadah), the amount of wine drunk before eating always left my head spinning and me sneaking off to the kitchen to try to tamp down the alcohol with a few surreptitious bites of matzah or a "checking to see if they're done" wolfing down of a matzah ball.

So, this month I'm celebrating matzah. Whether it's made into dumplings (matzah balls) or just spread with butter and served as a snack, matzah is delicious and satisfying. One of my favorites is Matzah Brei for breakfast... which seems a little odd and vaguely adventurous until you taste it and realize it's pure comfort food.

Matzah Brei (This recipe serves one—multiply accordingly)

2 eggs

1 sheet of matzah

1 tbsp milk

1 tbsp butter

Salt and pepper

Sour cream, jam, syrup, butter, applesauce

Whisk the eggs with the milk until fluffy. Run the matzah under hot running water until it begins to soften. You want it to be starting to get soft but not mushy—30 seconds to 1 minute. Put it on paper towel to rest while you heat the butter in a pan. Break the matzah into small pieces and saute in the butter for about a minute (till the pieces are fully coated) and then add the eggs. Stir and flip the eggs for another minute or two until they are no longer runny, but still soft. Don't overcook! Add salt and pepper to taste and serve immediately. I prefer it with just sour cream or maybe sour cream and a little bit of jam, but lots of people like it exactly the same way they'd eat French toast... which is pretty much what it is. Unleavened, scrambled French toast—simple, delicious, and comforting. Enjoy!

CUB News

Kris Thompsen

The Citizens Utility Board is currently involved in law suits against every utility in the state including non-standard utility companies. These are the people who offer you big savings on your utility bills, but hide many hidden costs in the "FINE PRINT." CUB has never found one that lives up to its promises. When you get these offers, you would be well advised to file them in the "circular file." We are all fighting a decidedly up-hill battle.

One way to keep up on what's happening is to check out the CUB Facebook page.

This would also give you a chance to renew or begin membership in CUB. Even a small donation of $10.00 would be greatly appreciated.

Respectfully,
